

TOP DOCTORS

All New! Physicians Pick the Region's 375 Best

Philadelphia

Plus

64 Rising Stars
The Next Generation of Great Philly Docs

(Meet these five and more, page 78)

Can Marc Vetri
Be Famous and Still Feed Us?

BY JOHN MARCHESI

A Style Guru's
Green Retreat in Bucks County

PAGE 96

Danny Bonaduce
Is Even Weirder
Than You Think

BY DON STEINBERG

The Battle
For the Soul of Philly's Jews

BY DAN P. LEE

phillymag.com

APR 05 $4.99

0 74851 87367 0

*Edited by Sandy Hingston
Photography by Jonathan Pushnik Research by Timothy Haas, Robert Huber, Dan P. Lee and Tom McGrath*

THE DOCTORS WILL SEE YOU NOW

We're lucky in Philadelphia—the future of medicine is already here. That's why this year, we wanted to shine a spotlight on the region's rising stars—our best physicians age 40 and under—and the astounding work they're doing, from 3-D robotic surgery to preserving the fertility of cancer patients to making blind men see

PLUS How local hospitals stack up against each other, and our annual list of the 375 Top Doctors in town

GUILLERMO OTERO-PÉREZ
VINCENT MOSS
VANCE MOSS
JOHN POTTS

Scott Lorch, 37

Neonatologist, CHOP
 Researches how economic factors and access to health care affect preemies in terms of their health and quality of life—as well as that of their parents. Lorch is also studying the effects of regionalization of care on outcomes, to help health-care providers allocate resources in the most cost-effective and quality-focused ways.

Jose Maceda, 36

Urogynecology, SPRINGFIELD
 Chief of female pelvic medicine and reconstructive surgery for Crozer-Keystone Health System. A rare fellowship-trained urogynecologist, he focuses on treating female pelvic-floor disorders, such as urinary incontinence and vaginal/pelvic organ prolapse.

Sumeet K. Mainigi, 34

Electrophysiology, EINSTEIN
 Established an electrophysiology program targeting previously untreatable, potentially life-threatening conditions such as atrial fibrillation, supraventricular tachycardia and ventricular tachycardia; success rates now compare to top programs in the world.

Anthony J. Mazzarelli, 34

Physician, attorney and bioethicist, COOPER
 “Dr. Mazz,” who has his own show on The Big Talker 1210 AM, is medical director of the emergency department at Cooper. A booster for the city of Camden, he’s creating an Urban Health Program to find new ways to engage its residents in caring for their health.

Raina Merchant, 36

Emergency medicine, HUP
 Conducting pioneering research on the uses of therapeutic hypothermia to preserve brain and organ function after resuscitation following cardiac arrest, also seeks to identify local communities that don’t have adequate defibrillators or CPR training to handle cardiac emergencies.

Nazanin Moghbeli, 34

Cardiologist, PENNSYLVANIA
 Founder of the Women’s Cardiovascular Center at Pennsylvania, she’s assembling a team of specialists to help women find solutions to their heart problems via nutrition, weight loss, medications and/or surgery. Evaluates and treats women with heart disease who want to become pregnant.

Vincent and Vance Moss, 37

Cardiothoracic surgeon and urologic transplant surgeon, respectively, CROZER-CHESTER (pictured) Identical twins, Eagle Scouts, Penn State undergrad and Temple Med School grads, the Mosses are both in the Army Reserve and have gone on volunteer tours of duty in Afghanistan and Iraq, serving the civilian populations of those countries and focusing on children. Vince: “We were interested in going to rural areas of Afghanistan where we were most needed. The State Department decided it was crazy.” Vance: “They said it looked like a suicide mission.” Vince: “We wanted to infiltrate areas never manned by Americans or coalition forces. We went there and gained trust, without flak jackets and weapons, by treating people, mostly with war injuries. We could go places—through poppy fields and Taliban strongholds.”

Yael P. Mossé, 37

Pediatric oncologist, CHOP
 Studies neuroblastoma, a rare childhood disease of the nervous system that’s the leading cause

Philly Mag’s Healthy Life

Get the latest health, wellness and fitness information with our new e-newsletter, Healthy Life. Twice a month, you’ll find advice from Philly Mag’s Top Doctors as well as leading trainers, nutritionists and wellness experts, plus the best local resources for healing whatever ails you. Sign up now at phillymag.com/newsletters.